

Models of TBI care and Rehabilitation

Internationally, care of the acutely brain injured has become progressively more standardised, with well accepted guidelines in place covering the various aspects of surgical and intensive care management. The availability and standardisation of acute and post-acute TBI rehabilitation is much less systematised and tends to vary in extent and approach even within health systems of relatively affluent countries. This talk will examine the multitude of models of care and approaches that have been trialled in different parts of the world with a practical focus on what can be learnt for our region.
